SCHOLARSHIP SPECTRUM:
Discovering, Teaching, Sharing

FACULTY SCHOLARSHIP • MAY 2010 – APRIL 2011

FROM THE PROVOST

A lot of bad news surrounded higher education this year; next year promises more of the same. Analysts of higher education report that students are not learning much at many colleges and universities. Legislatures around the country report that they are cutting funding to our institutions in order to balance state budgets. And the practices of for-profit universities have cast a shadow over all of our work as educators.

You will not find any evidence of that bad news in this publication. What this publication illustrates, instead, is that the faculty and students at Schreiner University—and at many other independent colleges and universities around the state and nation—are doing the work we do best: providing educational experiences that benefit our students and our communities, and engaging in scholarship and research that makes these educational experiences relevant, engaging, and cutting edge. Like many of their professional colleagues, Schreiner’s faculty typically conduct this work with little fanfare and little public acknowledgement. They do it anyway because they know that it benefits their students and our community. It is my hope that this publication provides some of the public acknowledgement they so richly deserve.

I predict that there is going to be more bad news for higher education over the next few years. We will struggle with budget issues, with discovering anew how best to deliver a transformative education given the increasingly rapid changes in technology, and with how to prepare students to live in a world for which we have no established scripts. As difficult as these challenges will be, they will not dissuade Schreiner’s faculty in the least from doing the thing they do best: fully embracing the life of the teacher-scholar. Schreiner’s faculty will continue to explore the world around them in all its textual, physical, social, cultural, symbolic, economic, artistic, and molecular forms. Then, they will use this new knowledge and insight in support of the students and community members who come to them to learn. I have no fear about any bad news that the pundits may prophesy. Next year, like this year, will be very good.

“If we knew what it was we were doing, it would not be called research, would it?”

—Albert Einstein

This quote reflects what I find most appealing about research: the difficult and seemingly never-ending task of trying to make sense of a confusing world. We are uniquely positioned at Schreiner to make students appreciate that task. Being a small liberal arts college with lots of contact with students, we can make them part of the process. Along the way, we share in their disappointments and failures but also their triumphs and discoveries. In the end, Schreiner values life-long learning for our students and there are few better ways to demonstrate life-long learning than doing it ourselves.

—Adam Feltz, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Philosophy and Interdisciplinary Studies

2009-2010 recipient of the Excellence in Scholarship, Research, and Creativity Award
