My name is Sally Middleton and I am an elementary music teacher in Northside Independent School District in San Antonio, TX. I grew up in San Antonio, so it was fitting that I return to the same district after college to teach. Ever since I can remember I have loved to sing. My parents used to get phone calls from my teachers in elemen tary school asking how they could get me to stop singing during class. I guess I was destined to teach music. I attended John Marshall High School in San Antonio and realized there that I wanted to be a music teacher. I had an absolutely amazing experience with music while in high school. Both of my directors were inspirational as well as musical role models. Attending Schreiner was one of the best experiences of my life. The sizes of my classes were excellent and helped me learn at my pace as well as receive any extra help I needed. Every memory in the music department is a good one. Whether it was hanging out before choir rehearsal, cramming for a piano jury, or enjoying the lectures from my professors, there wasn’t a moment that I didn’t love being at Schreiner.

While the orchestra conductor at Sam Rayburn High School in Passadena, the 1976 symphony orchestra at was named the Texas Superior Honor Orchestra of the State of Texas by the Texas Music Educators Association and performed a concert at the TEDA confer tence that year. That same year he received the Leadership and Achievement Award – a prestigious award presented by TMEA.

1992 was a banner year in Dr. Dunnahoo’s career. The Texas Orchestra Director’s Asso ciation named him its Orchestral Director of the Year. Also that same year, Texas State University’s Department of Music honored him with an Outstanding Music Educator Award.

Dr. Dunnahoo maintains his ties with other Texas music educators by working as the Executive Secretary for the Texas Music Adjudicators Association. Additionally, with twenty years experience as a director of music at First Presbyterian Church in Kerrville, Texas, he now serves as the interim director of music at First Presbyterian Church in Kerrville.

He and his wife, Jodie, live in Kerrville. They have four grown children (all string players) and eight grandchildren.

My music education degree from Schreiner is something I cherish and am so happy to have received. Since graduating in May of 2006, I have continued to use my education from Schreiner to help educate my elementary students. I love working with children and am proud to be an alumnus of Schreiner University.
